HRD APPROVED SCHEME (PROLUS)

INTRODUCTION

Many people would be surprised to learn that without the presence of the crushing industry, one would be without the raw materials necessary for the civil engineering of roads, bridges, waterways and buildings to accommodate the earth's ever expanding population.

The objective of crushing rock to produce aggregate products is generally to reduce the size of the rock to a specified range of properly sized and shaped particles, while minimising the production of unwanted sizes. Screening is the process of separating aggregate particles into desired sizes.

Over the years, there have been many state-of-the-art development in cone and gyratory crushing resulting in high productivity, high capacity, high efficiency machines which are compact and balance. Featuring the convenience and safety of hydraulics, they are used in the secondary and tertiary crushing of a wide range of products in both the aggregate and mining industries. They deliver maximum productivity with low start up and operating costs.

The proper selection of size and type of screen is important to the total production of a processing plant. Inadequate screening at full capacity, increases operating costs and produces inconsistent products.

The Institute of Quarrying Malaysia (IQM) takes this opportunity to introduce this course in particular for the benefit of the quarry operators who would like to gain further knowledge in the efficient operation of crushes and screens. Participants would be able to gain first hand knowledge on techniques, cost-saving procedures and other gains in terms of productivity.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

Owners, managers, engineers and supervisors of quarries and mines who wish to gain first-hand knowledge of crushing and screening equipment and techniques, cost saving as well as increased productivity in daily production through efficient use of crushers, screens and maintaining maximum safety during operation.
